

What's News

World-Wide

A forecast of Soviet oil output by the CIA may be "unduly pessimistic" in predicting a significant drop in production by 1990, a Library of Congress study concluded. The report emphasized that the Soviet Union's energy performance during this decade could range widely—from the "worst case" CIA forecast to substantial growth.